DEFENDS HOWARD

UNIVERSITY

To the Editor of The Bee:

The tenor of the article published in your issue of last Saturday with reference to the affairs of Howard University, was to discredit the administration there, and to create a sentiment of mistrust concerning the exercises of fair play in the distribution of salaries by the authorities of the University. To those in a position to know the facts it is clear that The Bee has been greatly misinformed on the point of salaries, and of course The Bee will be glad to make proper correction when furnished with the facts in the case. But aside from this merely minor point, the larger fact is the influence which such articles are bound to exercises not only in shaping the public attitude towards the school, but also in affecting the spirit of loyalty in the student body. The Bee has always stood committed to the policy of progress for every public institution or organization devoted to the elevation of the colored race, and Howard University because of its location, its mission, its traditions and equipment stands foremost among such institutions. Can The Bee afford now, by such publications, to throw obstacles in the path of the University's progress? The past few years have witnessed a very gratifying improvement in nearly every department of the University, with respect both to its facilities and its attendance; and this is but the beginning of what is to be if the program of the authorities is not hampered by unwarranted criticism from the outside and a deplorable disloyalty from within.

Howard University, like every other large institution, has had its share of troubles from within and without, but it is now seeing the dawn of a bright day. It has a distinct mission leading to a splendid future; and it should be the pleasure, as it surely is the duty, of every alumnus and friend of the university to lend a hand to the work of accomplishing that mission and making sure that future.

This surely can not be done by fomenting internal dissension, inviting public criticism, and fostering the spirit of disloyalty which must needs result from unwarranted aspersions on its management.

"Let us have peace" there once more, and if we cannot help let us at least not hinder the good work now in progress.
